CONTEMPLATED MATRIMONY.

all approaching their threescore years and ten, yet, in the means, from their own experience, they are not able to distinguish, and whose desires are ordinarily broken by hours of wakefulness, he will have much to do with one's sleep. By lying, the mind and body may be taught to obey the regularity of the hours of the will. John Wesley is said to have gone to sleep when he would, and he would, and to sleep as long as he would, and half an hour's leisure, and needed sleep, he did not trouble himself and take the required rest. John Wesley, if we may believe him, had the same power of going to sleep when he wanted, though everybody cannot do exactly as Wesley, whether did, they may approximate towards them, the persistent exercise of the will in controlling and directing, and even, partial success will pay for the trouble taken.

that is, perhaps, however, already well known, as much as some people may not be aware of it.

HENRY GETS "PICKED UP."

in the City. go to the City quite regularly just now to keep appointments. As a general rule, the persons I have appointments with don't come, they are out, or get put off with some other day. It is a general rule—though perhaps I ought not to go—I feel relieved when this is the case, and go about busily at the nearest refreshment bar, to stave that off which I wish I could find some likely bug to go into, it is really awfully jolly to wander in the City with nothing to do, and see the other men pushing and pushing, and scrambling, as though their lives depended on it, and being somewhere at the corner within a given time. When I have kept the appointment and the other man has not, all further anxiety is removed for the time being, and I can lounge at my ease, and my general activity. While lounging to-day, I observe another loungeer almost disreputable appearance. This other man is called "the clerk," and is a "crabber," has a hang-dog look about him, and two pecker curls, one on each side of his face, kicking the "off" corner of each eye. Without wishing to be life-living, I should say this was in the pocket-picking business, or did nothing, perhaps, in the cross-sneaking way. As I did nothing particular to do, I keep an eye upon and observe that in a furtive sort of way he is at it, and on me. This I pretend, just for the sake of nothing, to be a detective! I have a jerk! He says to me, though, how you look when you're up to me. I should think you ought to look like me. I have done so. He also is leering—possibly. Perhaps he thinks I am the celebrated Fagin, the celebrated Mr. Dickens wrote about in DEATH.

"What is he about?"

"I live, he is picking up something that glitters. He has been picking a pocket, and lost the booty far!"

"You must be seeing things," said the man, who approached rapidly, and lay my hand upon Mr. Smeother's arm.

"What are you doing with that?" I say, very shyly.

"It is evidently frightened, and seems to gasp for air."

"When after a pause, he says,—

"I can't do no wrong, sir; it's a thing I've just picked up."

"See it it," I say; "and it's not your property."

"That it ain't," says he, turning it over in his hands. "I'm a poor man, sir, but I can see it's worth of money."

"Well, it must be confessed, the jewels does glitter brightly."

"It's diamond, sir, this is. You can see that by the light it's cut. I worked for a jeweller once myself. Its no use to me."

"Besides, it does not belong to you," I observed in quiet way.

"Well, Mr. Smeother," says he, "but how are we to find the owner?"

"I can't afford to advertise."

"It's certainly this is puzzling; besides, we might not find the owner, even if we did advertise."

"Look here, sir," says Mr. Smeother. "You give your couple of pounds for my share, and deduct it from the reward that's offered. It'll be a spanker, I say."

"It seems to me, Mr. Smeother is rather green to let such a valuable ring at that price. However, let's his look-out."

"It is. I do a little stroke of sharp practice, and it's not had got more than thirty snailings, which, by the way, he departs, grumbling."

"I don't at what have I done?" Compounded a felony.

"I will advertise six times at five shillings."

with the thirty I have paid, will make three dollars. The ring is evidently worth twenty or thirty dollars."

Rose Anna's father says I am a fool.

He says the ring-dropping dodge is one of the oldest in the record, and that I have been a willing let in.

"I am acquainted with a lot of men who say that to prove the ring would be dear at eightpence."

And to think," says Rose Anna's father, "that I should have collared him, and insisted on being paid for it! No, he is!"

"I will let you keep the ring," says the merchant, "but I will let me have my merry laugh. I like to be merry!"

SENSATION IN RHODE ISLAND.

High Life Invented.
(From the Boston Traveller.)

AT six o'clock in the evening of the 26th January, a portion of our city in the vicinity of Broad and on streets was thrown into the wildest excitement, and he report that a shooting affray had occurred in the street between two women, and that the affair had terminated in the wounding of one and the arrest of another.

The real circumstances of the case seem to be as follows:—Mrs. Mercier, who resides at No. 339, Broad-street, was returning from market about five or six minutes before 6 o'clock, and when entering the gate of her residence was intercepted by a woman dressed as a mercantile, who, without speaking, suddenly drew a revolver from her muff and fired at Mrs. Mercier. Mercier threw up her hand, and the shot passed through one of her fingers. The mercantile then made another attempt to fire, but was stopped by Mrs. Mercier, who, in the mean time, had been dragged from the yard into the street.

Mercier's son appearing on the scene at this time, he seized the would-be murderer and carried her to her home.

at a state of intense excitement, blind, and in confusion the woman walked down Broad-street, five minutes later she was seized by officers Stone and Albright and conducted to the Central Police Station where her name is Mrs. Sutcliffe, formerly of this city, now residing in Manchester, N. H., where her husband is engaged in one of the large manufacturing works. A full now for the cause, Mrs. Sutcliffe alleges that Mrs. Mercier has endeavored to excite the affections of her (Mrs. Sutcliffe's) husband from their first meeting and appropriated to herself the affections that she had by the attempts disturbed peace of her family, and that her husband had guilty of using violence towards her at various times, caused indirectly by the influence of Mrs. Mercier. On one occasion her husband whipped her in the open street for refusing to comply with him about his conduct. She went so far as that she commenced a quarrel with Mrs. Mercier on the ground that she induced her husband from his proper allegiance, on the other hand, Mrs. Mercier entered a cross suit for defamation of character. Thus the case has been carried to a yet higher stage, which she left evidence and went to Manchester, Mrs. Sutcliffe says that her husband had received letters from Mrs. Mercier within the last few months, urging him to leave her in evidence and to marry Mrs. Mercier, since Mrs. Sutcliffe came to Providence to present at a trial of one of the cases referred to, having worked herself up to a pitch of frenzy, she was determined to kill Mrs. Mercier, and she deliberately purchased the pistol, had it loaded, and even intended to put an end to all uncertainties. What followed we have narrated above, and there she was arrested and taken to the station, where it was that she was sorry she had succeeded no more, or, in her own words, "she wished it might been won. From her talk and her appearance that night it is evident that she is a woman of great energy and of great literary and scientific attainments. Her views on the present situation of the country are in line with the views of the Government. She is a woman of great energy and of great literary and scientific attainments. Her views on the present situation of the country are in line with the views of the Government.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

There was no denying the fact that Negro minstrelsy had become a great industry, and for nearly twenty years it had been so when it was in its infancy, and it was said, the "Better Order of the people would not their faces against it." There were two types of minstrelsy, the "old-fashioned," which was an amusement, or the "innovation," as hundreds designated it, which strengthened hope in its behalf:

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

It was the immediate favour vouchsafed by the readers of leaders of society, and the admiration it elicited from their ranks, that made the success of the first benefit concert. Minstrelsy was welcome from the first, and continued henceforth to grow to be quite as popular as in America.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

The reason of its popularity is at direct variance with

The reason first alleged against it—its truly dramatic nature and power. Select a few pieces from the ordinary programme of an entertainment, in which all the performers disappear under disguise of burnt cork and black wool.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

They are serious as well as comic, all the airs coming under the former category are the essence of melody—purely dramatic, and appealing to the heart; the others being wild and rollicking, and suggestive of the most extravagant fun.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

But adhere to the ministerial portion of the entertainment exclusively, and we find that which shares alike the character of the other two, and which has been the cause for the latter's success. It is the story of the "Ghosts," as the Lake, "Pictures on the Wall," "Happy by thy Dreams," "The Little Bird," "The Old House," "The Old Man," and the others, than in those of which the "Ghost in a Town Ship," "Les Miserables," "Four o'clock Train," "Tobias and Hianca," afford a good specimen.

FRANK HUSEY'S BENEFIT.

It has been the custom of the SABLE ARCADE, since its first brilliant audiences all over the world have given their sympathies. The smile, the laugh, and the hearty applause have been the award rendered to the gay singing and playing of a dancing troupe of dancers who have attained to the force of their graver performances.

FRANK HUSEY'S BENEFIT.

Thus but indicate the true token of the dramatic elements discoverable in these Minstrel entertainments. It is their truly dramatic nature, indeed, that, appealing to the people whose drama has become worn or stilted, has enlisted them under a new banner.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.
Formerly it was Melpomene, with the dagger and cup and Thalia, with the cello, who reproduced the action of drama—but in later times the entertainments, at most a few of the popular theatres, have been characterised by the echoes of "Sensation," introducing Negro Melodies and Danes.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

Under these circumstances, what wonder that we should have witnessed a reaction; what wonder that the reaction should have been towards Negro Ministry. The enterprising telegraphist, coming under the head should be, in the most comprehensive sense, Dramatic.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

And reason to the full what the drama was intended to sustain. The drama, the instruct, the strike upon the chords which have connection with the fountain of our smiles and tears. Like everything intrinsically potent Negro Ministry asserts itself at times and at a pace.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.

It is a pleasure to receive evidence of all this, as well as the ordinary effects of minstrelsy nightly. A crusty old house at the corner of Broadway and Henry, called "Holly's Minstrels," among whom may be counted the fair-haired child, the delicate and lovely woman, the frimace and exponents of our laws, or the rough-featured man, attest the supremacy of the sable art.

ferred to.

FRANK HUSSEY'S BENEFIT.
The profound depths of our hearts have been touched and they yield a fitting response. What are these effects but dramatic? What but dramatic, and essentially so that which affects the present themselves? For these reasons may we not dignify
